The Department of Religious Studies at the University of Pittsburgh Presents:

AMERICAN CHINESE MEDICINE: ORIENTALIZED BIOPower

Tyler Phan
University College London, PhD Candidate in Anthropology

Wednesday, April 13, 2016
12:00 PM
602 Cathedral of Learning
Humanities Center

This talk is based on an ethnographic study of Chinese medicine in the United States. Informed by interviews with key practitioners and fieldwork at educational institutions, it demonstrates how Caucasians shape the way Chinese medicine is practiced, viewed, and sanctioned in the United States, often marginalizing those who brought the medicine to this country.

Tyler Phan is a Ph.D. candidate in Anthropology at University College London (UCL), where he is writing his dissertation on "American Chinese Medicine." He has a M.A. in Religions (SOAS), a M.Ac. in Acupuncture (Jung Tao School of Classical Chinese Medicine), and a B.A. in Religious Studies (University of Pittsburgh).

For more information, please contact: relgst@pitt.edu

Sponsored by: Department of Religious Studies, Department of Anthropology, and the Undergraduate Studies Office